

Eliza Dushku is an actor, producer, student, and philanthropist. Eliza has been a professional actress since "being discovered" at the age of 9, and has co-starred with Robert DeNiro, Leonardo DiCaprio, Francis McDormand, and James Franco (This Boys Life, City by the Sea), Arnold Schwarzenegger and Jamie Lee Curtis (True Lies), Kirsten Dunst (Bring it On), Alan Rickman, Mary Steenburgen and Bill Pullman (Nobel Son), as well as Kevin Smith (Jay and Silent Bob Strike Back). On television, she starred in many seasons of Buffy the Vampire Slayer as "Faith" and in her own FOX series Tru Calling followed by Joss Whedon's Dollhouse (which she co-produced). Eliza has guest-starred on The Big Bang Theory, Ugly Betty, and That 70's Show, with extensive voiceover work on The Cleveland Show, King of The Hill, Hulk and the Agents of S.M.A.S.H., and as Catwoman in Batman: Year One.

Eliza has been in numerous independent films, thus, producing is natural for Eliza, and to everything she brings her notable passion and energy. She utilizes her experience in film development under the aegis of her Boston Diva Productions. Boston Diva Productions' current properties include Dear Albania, a PBS documentary about her father's homeland, Mapplethorpe, a biopic on the famed photographer, Robert Mapplethorpe, starring Matt Smith, and The Black Company, a television series currently in development based on the dark fantasy book series.

With over 2.5 million social media followers, Eliza's voice provides advocacy in areas such as LGBT, women's and civil rights. Dushku is deeply involved in a number of charities, including Camp Hale, a camp for inner-city Boston kids.

Eliza co-founded a trauma rehabilitation and reintegration NGO in Northern Uganda with her mother in 2009, THRIVE-GULU which works with women and former child-soldiers of the devastating Joseph Kony war.

Today, she is a Psychology Master's Degree candidate in a graduate program in greater Boston, where she lives happily with her two young sons and husband.
