

Haeyoung Yoon is Senior Director of Policy at the National Domestic Workers Alliance. Over the course of her career, Haeyoung worked on low-wage and immigrant workers rights issues. Prior to National Domestic Workers Alliance, Haeyoung was Distinguished Taconic Fellow at Community Change, where she led a project to develop Community Change's forward-looking immigration vision and agenda for the 21st century by working with its network of immigrant rights organizations (Fair Immigration Reform Movement) and engaging diverse stakeholders in the broader immigration and immigrant rights field.

At the National Employment Law Project, Haeyoung was the Director of Strategic Partnership and a Deputy Program Director. Haeyoung co-directed a program area that combines policy design, campaign support, advocacy, research, and strategic communication to expand economic opportunity and security for working people in our economy. In her capacity as the Director of Strategic Partnerships, Haeyoung led a first-of-its kind of initiative in California that brought together worker organizations and the Labor Commissioner's office to develop community-driven strategies to enforce workplace standards.

Haeyoung also has extensive litigation experience. At the Urban Justice Center, she represented low-wage and immigrant workers working in service industries, including domestic work, restaurant, and construction in wage and hour litigation. She was one of the lead counsel in Iqbal v. Ashcroft, a civil rights case on behalf of two South Asian and Arab immigrant men who were wrongfully detained and subjected to cruel and inhumane treatment and discrimination in a detention center in the aftermath of 9/11. She was awarded a Trial Lawyer of the Year Finalist by Public Justice in 2006 for Iqbal v. Ashcroft. Haeyoung also taught at the New York University School of Law and Brooklyn Law School.
