

Joe Spielberger is a policy counsel at the Project On Government Oversight (POGO), where he advocates in Congress and the executive branch to strengthen whistleblower rights, protect a merit based civil service, and promote government ethics and transparency.

He has been cited in the Washington Post, the Baltimore Sun, the Miami Herald, the Appeal, Bloomberg, The Hill, and a Fourth Circuit Court decision.

Prior to joining POGO, Joe worked as the public policy counsel for the ACLU of Maryland, lobbying in the Maryland General Assembly on issues concerning law enforcement, immigration, women's rights, constitutional rights, and government transparency and accountability. He played a significant role in passing four major bills into law.

He previously worked in state and local government in Maryland.

He has also worked for several nonprofit organizations serving vulnerable communities, including homeless veterans in Washington, D.C., and people facing capital punishment in Louisiana.

He earned a J.D. from Villanova University, and a B.A. from Loyola Marymount University.