

Chris Altchek
(Chris Alt-check)

Chris is the CEO & founder of Cadence, a clinical technology company helping health systems deliver world-class care to patients at home. Cadence currently monitors over 18,000 patients concurrently across 20 states as the enterprise-wide remote monitoring partner for health systems including Providence, Rush University Medical Center, Montage Health, Community Health Systems, and Lifepoint Health. Chris previously founded and sold Mic. Public service roles include the White House and Mayor Michael Bloomberg's re-election campaign. Chris comes from a family of physicians (married to an anesthesiologist, son of an orthopedic surgeon, brother to an OBGYN).

Prior to founding Cadence, Chris was the CEO and co-founder of Mic, an impact-driven digital media company (acquired in 2018). Before co-founding Mic in 2011, Chris worked at Goldman Sachs, the White House, and Michael Bloomberg's 2009 reelection campaign. He was named to Crain's 40 Under 40 in 2017, Forbes' 30 Under 30 in 2014, and Goldman Sachs' 100 Most Intriguing Entrepreneurs in 2015 and 2016.