

will be—already are being—disproportionately hit by these new taxes on their exports (from retaliatory tariffs) and their production inputs.

I therefore urge the Congressional majority to take substantive, as opposed to unenforceable, steps to reclaim their Constitutional role of setting tariffs and regulating trade. Not only would such actions help those being hurt by the trade war, but they would show the American people that this body can work together to promote what's best for our country and our economy, and in so doing, is willing to stand up to a reckless President who is clearly not concerned about abusing his power.
