

Grant A. Driessen [Drees-son], PhD

Specialist in Public Finance, Congressional Research Service

Dr. Driessen is a specialist in public finance in the government and finance division of the Congressional Research Service. His work covers a range of fiscal policy issues related to public budgeting, debt management, and fiscal federalism. He previously worked for the Congressional Budget Office where he served as the primary forecaster for their baseline projections of federal excise tax revenues and customs duties. He also teaches public finance courses at Northwestern University. He received a PhD in economics from Tulane University and a BA in economics from the College of William & Mary.